Maybe you've just delivered a preterm infant or have an infant or child with special health care needs or a traumatic brain injury. We've all had questions about our child's health and development. And when your baby is born early, has special health care needs, or a traumatic brain injury you may have even more questions. We understand that. And we're here to help.

support

Support

With years of experience working with children who have special health care needs, our nurses can:

- Monitor development
- Help you understand special health care needs and treatment choices
- Help you find local services
- Help you to support your child within the health care system
- Support optimal growth and development

information

Accurate and Up-to-Date

Our nurses are trained to be up-to-date about infant and child health care needs and resources. They can help answer questions about:

- Accessing routine and special needs health care
- Times of change (NICU to home, to preschool, to kindergarten)
- Growth and development
- How your baby communicates with you
- Feeding and nutrition
- Infant and child care
- Health and wellness

services

Connections to Services

It's our job to know what services and support are available in the community for infants and children who may have special health care needs. We can help you find:

- Health care services
- Vision and hearing screening
- Evaluation services
- Financial help
- Preschool and therapy programs
- Services for children who have suffered traumatic brain injury
